
No all-in table: What it means

Posted by 4TexasHoldem - 2007/10/16 16:47

You may have noticed some online games have "no all-in" tables. In case you were wondering what these tables mean, it means there is no all in protection. In other words, if you get disconnected your hand would be folded if there is a bet to you.

Unscrupulous players have been known to disconnect in tables where there is all-in protection, allowing them to get paid off on the money they've bet if the opponent is bluffing, while not losing a stack when villain has a set or a straight draw that hits. This situation got to be pretty bad and happened very often back in the day, but I do not see it much now.

Re:No all-in table: What it means

Posted by Dishin Nutrition - 2007/10/18 19:16

Thanks for clearing that up dude. I really had no idea why it would say "No all-in" yet I've been all-in a couple of times at those tables.

Re:No all-in table: What it means

Posted by Whalewager - 2007/11/08 16:20

With the technology today, I believe the poker rooms can tell pretty easily if someone leaves the table manually. If someone makes a habit of this, they should be banned permanently imo

Re:No all-in table: What it means

Posted by ninikins - 2008/01/06 09:50

Seems that I'm still a pretty naive player, didnt know this happened.
